

Consumer compensation

After careful consideration, Harrison REMC has established compensation levels for consumer-owned renewable energy that ensures equity for all member-consumers. It is important that compensation be fair to both those who choose to interconnect a distributed generation device and those who do not. The payment structure is a modified net metering approach as seen below.

- The member-consumer avoids paying retail rate for any energy produced and consumed.
- Energy that is produced and returned to the grid is compensated at an avoided cost rate.

Energy produced and used by the consumer, shown in light blue in the chart below, would be an energy offset at your retail rate. The area shaded in green is energy returned to the grid that would be compensated at the avoided cost rate.
